That's what I thought. Thanks!

And this Marathon site isn't associated with the Wilcox site, correct?

The meeting last week was for the Transcontinental Oil Site. This is a state voluntary cleanup site where ODEQ is working with Marathon Oil. EPA is not involved.

Jennah, we did not have a meeting in Bristow last week, so if there was in fact a meeting it must have been with the State.

Hi Blake—

A reporter asked about a meeting last week with EPA and Marathon Oil in Bristow, OK, referring to an Ohio Oil Refinery site. Does this ring a bell? I'm copying Katrina because of her familiarity with Bristow. See the reporter's questions below. Let me know if this is something the state should answer.

Thanks!

I heard Marathon Oil and EPA held a public meeting last week in Bristow, OK about the voluntary clean-up site.

People in the community are telling me they didn't know about the meeting.

How did you notify the public about the meeting?

Did you notify the news media?

What information was given at the meeting?

Has the site name been changed from Ohio Oil Refinery Site to Transcontinental?

Is there any connection between that site and the Wilcox site?

Is Marathon connected in any way to the Wilcox site?

What work has been done so far at the Transcontinental site? I know samples were taken. Are results back from those samples?

What communication have you had with neighbors on the site? They are saying they have not received any letters/notifications of what has been happening or what's next.

What action will be taken next and when?
